NUMBER 45.

School Per Capita May Be Increased.

Owing to the increase in the number of children of the school age, more money is likely to be received by the schools from the State. The per capita for last year, $3.30, was the largest ever declared by Kentucky, and it is expected that the revenues for the year will justify an increase of from five to ten cents. State Superintendent of Public Instruction J. H. Fuqua is now at work figuring on the per capita, which will be announced in a few days. The total number of children of school age in Kentucky, shown in the annual census just completed, is 739,640, an increase of 6,309 over the census of a year ago. The total number reported in the country districts is 590,928, while the cities contain 148,712.

All persons knowing themselves indebted to the estate of the late Benj. Perry are earnestly requested to call at the store at once and settle with the undersigned.

Nearing Century Mark.

George B. Creekham, a farmer living near Brent, Ky., recently celebrated his ninety-ninth birthday anniversary. He has occupied his present home over eighty years. His six children, nineteen grandchildren and six great-grand children assisted in the celebration. The old gentleman makes the boast that he has used tobacco over seventy years. His teeth remain perfect, never having one drawn, and he states he never had occasion to use glasses even when reading the newspaper. Neither was he ever confined to his bed from sickness, and his health continues perfect.

Good For Stock.

Pine tar for cows that are swelling from eating clover is just the thing. A little tar placed in the animal's tongue will generally give relief. A Woodford county farmer has tried this remedy repeatedly on his stock with good results.

An Invitation.

The farmers of Bourbon are cordially invited to inspect the large stock of harness, collars, hames, pads, whips, saddles, horseboots, etc., etc., on our second floor before purchasing. We can save you money.

Going In Debt.

One of the very worst things one can do is to spend money before it is earned—go in debt—buy on credit. The system is one of the greatest systems of "hard luck," or financial straits. To buy things and settle for them with "promises to pay" will surely bring trouble no matter how large a salary one has. By thus tying up our resources, we are never in a position to meet the future with anything like a comfortable condition of mind, and if for any reason our earning ability is cut off, it places us in a very disagreeable position. The only sane, sensible way to live is to set aside, every day, some portion of our earnings, and force ourselves to live strictly within the limits of what is left. We may want more than this balance will buy, but it won't hurt us half as much to want, as to face a deficit with no prospect, or a distant one, of being able to meet our obligations. We all have too much as it is. We could do with much less, and still be happy.

Stylish Vehicles.

If you are looking for a stylish buggy, runabout, phaeton, depot wagon, carriage, or other stylish vehicle, you can find in our repository something that will supply your wants—and the price is right. We invite you to come and see.

Holiness Meeting.

A barn meeting at Black's Cross Roads is in progress, and is creating much interest. It is conducted by Evangelist T. P. Roberts, a "holiness" preacher, assisted by Evangelist B. Wilson, of that neighborhood. There have been fifteen conversions. There was a great crowd in attendance Sunday, when there was an all day session. The services will continue for three weeks, and many of the holiness preachers from Wilmore will preach during the meeting.

Paris "Quick-Steps" Win.

The Paris Q. S. vs. the Maysville baseball team was the attraction at Asberry Park Sunday afternoon and resulted in a score of 11 to 2 in favor of the Paris team. The game was witnessed by about 400 people. Both teams are colored.

Prominent Men Engage In Street Fight.

Col. W. R. Milward had a narrow escape from death Saturday at the hands of former Senator C. J. Bronston on the streets of Lexington. Three bullets from the latter's revolver narrowly missed him, and a fourth bullet being turned from its course by a bunch of keys in Col. Milward's pocket.

Col. Milward, was walking down Broadway about 2:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon, leading his little grandchild by the hand. Near the corner of Second street met Mr. Bronston. Considerable ill-feeling has existed between the men for some time, but ignoring this, Col. Milward approached ex-Senator Bronston and spoke pleasantly, asking that the old troubles be forgotten. The latter refused to accept this proffered olive branch and an altercation ensued, the details of which are told differently by each of the two principals.

The sounds of the shots attracted a large crowd to the scene, and Col. Milward and Mr. Bronston were surrounded. The revolver was taken from Mr. Bronston, and the shooting affray ended. Both Col. Milward and Mr. Bronston were arrested. Col. Milward was charged with a breach of the peace, and Mr. Bronston was charged with assault with a pistol. Later in the afternoon when Mr. Bronston came out of the Security Trust Building he met Stanley Milward, son of Col. Milward, and they became engaged in a heated discussion, but friends intervened and Milward walked away from Bronston.

Shortly after the shooting Saturday afternoon friends of Mr. Bronston approached friends of Col. Milward, and they argued among themselves that Col. Milward and Mr. Bronston should sign papers not to renew the trouble.

High School Alumni Meets.

A large number of graduates of the Paris High School met at the courthouse Tuesday evening to perfect the Alumni Association. By-laws were discussed and a closer organization was effected. It was agreed to meet Monday evening, July 29, at the courthouse to take the final steps in the organization. All members and graduates are requested to be present. Much good is going to result from this organization in the future.

Gigantic Fleet To Go To Orient.

Uncle Sam is soon to send into Pacific waters one of the largest squadrons of war vessels ever assembled in one movement. The largest and most modern war vessels will constitute the fleet, which will be in command of "Fighting Bob" Evans. The total strength of the fleet is 449,030 tons and 722 guns.

Admiral Dewey is planning the movement and it is believed by high naval authority that the presence of the fleet in the Pacific ocean will have the effect of allaying the feeling of unrest in the Japanese question.

Attend Harry Simon's Great July Trade Sale, beginning Saturday, July 6th, closing Saturday, July 20th.

A $1,000 Premium.

Another $1,000 premium has been added to the classification for the Blue Grass Fair to be held at Lexington during the week of August 12 to 17.

It is the richest premium ever offered under the same conditions at any fair or horse show in America, and is certain to result in a splendid contest that will attract national attention.

It is a special premium donated by a group of men whose particular object is to see the production of a five-gaited combined horse the superior of any such horse the breed of American saddle horses has yet produced. Recognizing the fact that one horse is no criterion of the fitness of certain blood to produce a given object, they offer, in their own language, the following, viz:

"Two, the get of one sire; stallions, mares or geldings, or of mixed sex; four years old and over. To be shown first in harness, when considerations governing your fine harness horses shall prevail, and then to be shown under saddle, when considerations governing your fine harness horses shall prevail, and then to be shown under saddle, when considerations governing your five-gaited saddle horses shall prevail. To use the language of your specifications, 'showing in harness under the conditions named to count forty per cent. and showing under saddle under conditions named to count sixty per cent.' We, the subscribers, claim the privilege of naming the judge and will furnish his name to your secretary on Monday, August 5, 1907. The subscription offered is to go to the first two horses. You may tie red ribbons on the second two if you like. To the first two $1,000."

First Thresher Started.

J. E. Grey started the first thresher in Bourbon yesterday on the farm of George Jacoby.

Buy Export Cattle.

Simon Wiel, of Lexington, has purchased of Caswell Prewitt, of Montgomery county, fifty-five head of export cattle, average weight 1,450 pounds at 54 cents. The cattle will be shipped early in August.

Fine Horse Sold.

Mr. Lampkin, of Louisiana, was here this week looking over Bourbon county's fine horses, and purchased a fine saddle horse of Allie G. Jones, of North Middletown. The price was a good one, but private.

PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.The Third Term Menace.

While the leading Republican newspapers of the country are, as a rule, opposed to the renomination of Roosevelt by the Republican party, there appears to be a systematic campaign going on throughout the country in favor of it. Evidences of that campaign are cropping out in such papers as the Washington Herald and the Atlanta Georgian, and in reading matter furnished by press bureaus and correspondents to many country papers. The plan seems to be to build up a distinct Roosevelt party, something on the order of Mr. Hearst's Independence League, which will be able to sandbag the Republican national convention, as Mr. Hearst's League sandbagged the New York Democratic State convention last year. The promoters of this scheme are proceeding by indirection. Their line of argument is illustrated by the following extract from an article in the Washington Herald of June 26, written in reply to an editorial of the Brooklyn Eagle:

"Mr. Roosevelt is not engaged in forcing his renomination. His attitude is not at all that of a candidate for a third term. He has not even countenanced a movement for his renomination. There is really no such movement, at any rate not in an organized or tangible form. What exists is a sentiment, or belief, that the President ought to be renominated. What if this sentiment should dominate the Republican national convention; what if the nomination, instead of being forced by Roosevelt, should be forced upon him? Would not such an eventuality put the moral aspect of the President's election night declaration in an entirely different light from that in which the Eagle views it? The Eagle has ignored the more probable contingency for a less probable if not altogether impossible one. There is a vital distinction between the two."

Such talk as this is appearing constantly in a class of papers which have no claims to leadership in either party. And it is true as the Brooklyn Eagle says, that "it is probable the President could force his own renomination. Nothing could save that from being recognized as a forced process. It would be stigmatized as a violation of his freely and solemnly pledged word."

A Sinister Brand.

Mr. Faribanks ought to have known better than to use just 40 Manhattan cocktails on the occasion of the President's visit to Indianapolis. The number used suggests the "forty thieves," and the Manhattan brand suggests "Wall Street thieves." If he had ordered an odd number of good whisky cocktails, he might have escaped the wrath of good Democrats, even though his Methodist Republican brethren kicked like steers. But as it is, he has no sympathy from any quarter except Wall Street and Oyster Bay and even the President may curse him for mixing him up as one of the wine-bibbers.

The Question Of Expediency.

When the time comes to elect delegates to the Democratic national convention the question of expediency must be considered in selecting the candidate for president. What states can he carry; that is the vital question. It would be folly to nominate our best friend or neighbor and see him defeated. The best man in the United States may not get votes enough to win, he may be too outspoken, or be known to advocate some reform that a section of his party is opposed to, perhaps because it is not thoroughly understood. A minority party is compelled to be more careful than the party in power with its many ways of smoothing out rough places and placating kickers.

The Power To Tax.

The reason why there is at present so much popular feeling against corporations in general is that the men who manage those institutions make use of public franchises, which are really nothing but licenses to serve the people, as means and instruments of oppression, extortion, and corruption, and convert their license to serve into a power to tax—a power which none but the government should possess or exercise.

Official Smuggling.

There seems to be a compact between the Republican officials of the United States Treasury and our naval officers that if they smuggle and get caught they will be let off by the payment of the tariff duty, but if they are not caught there is no harm done. As long as the tariff that protects the trusts is the law of the land, naval officers have no more right to evade paying the tariff tax than the rest of us, and if they persist in smuggling they should be punished as the law directs.

Betting On Governor Folk.

Amongst the Southern men who are being urged by their friends for the Democratic nomination for president, it will not do to overlook Governor Folk of Missouri. He was the original prosecutor of grafters and was a reformer before President Roosevelt had woken up to the political possibilities of that role. In Tennessee there seems to be a Folk boom, judged by the fact that Lafe Brown, an enterprising citizen of Brownsville, has bet Cyrus Webb $1,000 that "Joe Folk" will be next president. The dispatch that announces this adds, that:

"Following the visit of Gov. Folk to his old home in Brownsville, there has been much interest in Folk's chances, and if the South is to provide a man he will receive the support of all in this section."

The Scheme That Won't Work.

James J. Hill says that the credit of the railroads has been ruined. Loss of credit, of course, means that the public has lost confidence in the managers of the railroad corporations; and for that result the Harrimans, Schiffs, Cassatts, and others who have been involved in the scandals of the past two years are responsible. No doubt, these men would be glad to unload their watered stock on the Government. But that scheme won't work.

Republican Peanut Reformers.

The Republican leaders of Massachusetts sternly demand the abolition of the tariff duty on "peanuts." Thus is the great protective system crumbling through the peanut politics in its very cradle. "Give us free peanuts, and tax all else as the trusts may desire!" say the Republicans. As to clothing, woolen goods, rugs, chemicals, coal, lumber, etc., let them all be taxed; but give us peanuts free of duty. Truly, a Republican is a peanut reformer.

Winning By Justice.

The president has authorized Secretary of State Root to notify the Chinese ambassador that he will recommend the reduction of the indemnity agreed upon at the close of the boxer trouble. The indemnity claimed by the United States was $24,440,000 and some six millions have been paid. It has been found that $11,000,000 will cover our loss and expense incurred, and the president will ask congress to reduce the amount to the actual loss incurred.

This is an act of justice which very naturally impresses the Chinese with our fairness and the Chinese ambassador has, in eloquent words, expressed his nation's gratitude. Our nation strengthens its position when it gives evidence of its desire to do justice to all in its international dealings and the president has made no mistake in reaching the conclusion which has been announced.

Some forty years ago our government voluntarily reduced an indemnity which Japan was paying and the Japanese always speak of it in extending a welcome to an American. As nations collect indemnity by force it is the more important that they should scrupulously avoid anything like extortion. Our nation sets a splendid example in refusing to accept more than the damages actually suffered and time will demonstrate that from a commercial standpoint as well as from the standpoint of morals it pays for our government to be just.

Has Troubles Of Its Own.

Congressman Burton, of Ohio, has declared for tariff reform. In a speech at Aurora, he said: "Republicans must give early attention to the revision of the tariff. The time is already ripe". He wants "freer access to our markets;" or, in other words, freer trade. With Burton a free trader and Knox a strict constructionist, it looks as if the Republican party has troubles of its own.

Poetry With a Sting In It.

On one occasion when William Hamilton Hayne was visiting Samuel Minturn Peck at the latter's home in Tuscaloosa the two poets strolled into the woods and paused to rest beneath the shadows of the pines.

"Here are your favorite pines, Hayne," said Peck. "Let's dream a few poems beneath them."

The languid summer day had its effect on them, and they were soon snoring and dreaming away.

But suddenly both awoke and both started down the home road at top speed, shouting as they ran.

An army of yellow jackets had discovered them, and, not being partial to poetry, had forcibly and feelingly resented its intrusion on their domain.

Later, at supper, Peck asked: "Did you make a poem, Hayne?"

"No," was the meek reply. "I made a poultice!"

"So did I," said Peck.

English Plum Pudding.

For English plum pudding clean, wash and dry a pound of currants; stone a pound of raisins. Mix the currants, raisins, a pound of suet, chopped fine, three-quarters of a pound of stale breadcrumbs, a quarter of a pound of brown sugar, the grated rind of a lemon, half a pound of minced candied orange peel, a quarter of a pound of flour, half of a grated nutmeg. Beat five eggs, add to them half a pint of orange juice, then pour over the dry ingredients and mix thoroughly. Pack into greased small kettles or molds. This will make about six pounds. Boil ten hours. Serve with hard sauce.

Not What He Asked.

In these days of individualism in thought and action the balance of decision tips more and more toward the personal. Even in the matter of spelling the ego asserts itself in the face of tradition and history. Bobby in Fit-Bits is not the only person who constitutes himself the final court of appeal in the realm of orthography.

"So you go to school, do you, Bobby?" asked the minister.

"Yes, sir," answered Bobby.

"Let me hear how you spell 'bread'."

"B-r-e-d-e."

"The dictionary spells it with an 'a,' Bobby."

"Yes, sir, but you didn't ask me how the dictionary spells it. You asked me how I spell it."

Finally I began taking Dr. King's New Discovery, and continued this for six months, when my cough and lung trouble were entirely gone and I was restored to my normal weight, 170 pounds." What Do They Cure?

The above question is often asked concerning Dr. Pierce's two leading medicines, "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Favorite Prescription."

The answer is that "Golden Medical Discovery" is a most potent alternative or blood-purifier, and tonic or invigorator and acts especially favorably in a curative way upon all the mucous lining surfaces, as of the nasal passages, throat, bronchial tubes, stomach, bowels and bladder, curing a large per cent. of catarrhal cases whether the disease affects the nasal passages, the throat, larynx, bronchia, stomach (as catarrhal dyspepsia), bowels (as mucous colitis), bladder, uterus or other pelvic organs. Even in the chronic or ulcerative stages of these affections, it is often successful in affecting a cure.

The "Favorite Prescription" is advised for the cure of one class of diseases—those peculiar weaknesses, derangements and irregularities incident to women only. It is a powerful yet gently acting invigorating tonic and nerve. For weak worn-out, over-worked women—no matter what has caused the break-down, "Favorite Prescription" will be found most effective in building up the strength, regulating the womanly functions, subduing pain and bringing about a healthy, vigorous condition of the whole system.

A book of particulars wraps each bottle giving the formulae of both medicines and quoting what scores of eminent medical authors, whose works are consulted by physicians of all the schools of practice as guides in prescribing, say of each ingredient entering into these medicines. The words of praise bestowed on the several ingredients entering into Dr. Pierce's medicines by such writers should have more weight than any amount of non-professional testimonials, because such men are writing for the guidance of their medical brethren and know whereof they speak.

Both medicines are non-alcoholic, non-secret, and contain no harmful habit-forming drugs, being composed of glyceric extracts of the roots of native American medicinal forest plants. They are both sold by dealers in medicine. You can't afford to accept as a substitute for one of these medicines of known composition, any secret nostrum.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets, small, sugar-coated, easy to take as candy, regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels.

A Memorial Day Story
By STANLEY JOHNSON

Copyright, 1906, by Stanley Johnson.

"I WISH you didn't take it so much to heart, Aaron. Let it be enough for you and me that we know our boy died fighting for his country."

"It is enough, surely—enough for us, Mary. But not for Harry. I mean to show folks that I believe he lies among the nation's honored dead at Gettysburg and was not a deserter, even if the records at Washington say he was. I knew my boy—our only child. We gave him to the Union. That record is a dreadful mistake."

And so it was every Memorial day and at the annual encampments of the Grand Army Aaron Treadwell never failed to give public testimony of his faith in his son's innocence. Mrs. Treadwell always pleaded with him to be content with his own firm conviction of his son's soldierly qualities. But it was all in vain, and the father and mother appeared together.

"No, Mary," he continued, "I shall never be too old to do this for Harry. God forbid it! Harry never turned his back on his duty, not even with the threatened slaughter at Gettysburg!"

Trescott sent many strong men to the front in 1861. Some of them are alive today, and each Memorial day they walk to the cemetery on the brow of the hill, and the blue peaks of New Hampshire's majestic mountains look down upon their devotion.

One of these brave boys was Harry Treadwell, the only child and mainstay of his father and mother on the Blue Hill farm. When Captain Lang organized a regiment of the New Hampshire farmers from Grafton county he had returned flushed with excitement and the ardent patriotism of his nineteen years.

"I must go, father. I hate to leave you and mother, and so much to do with all the new land we have cleared, but it wouldn't be right. One of us must go, and it were better it was I."

Mary Treadwell's face blanched. "Oh, Harry," she exclaimed, "we cannot spare you! It would kill me. Our only child, my boy, to go and be shot down!"

"No, no! It were better I went, father. I am young and full of life—yes, and full of fight for the country we both love."

And so it was decided. During the following six weeks Harry drilled with the others on the village green. His enthusiasm often dried the tears on his mother's cheeks and made his father's heart bound with pride.

"There are worse troubles than this, mother," he would say, "and one of them would be to stay up here in Trescott while the others went to do the fighting."

When the day came for departure, after the first battle of Bull Run, his mother gave him a Testament and a little memorandum book. Aaron Treadwell had been down to the Trescott National bank and, drawing out a portion of the money saved from the profits of the Blue Hill farm, gave him a gold watch.

"I was going to give it to you when you was twenty-one, Harry. It may save your life some time. Such things happen."

Harry Treadwell was one of the faithful units in the ranks that did the real work of preserving the integrity of the United States. He was in seventeen battles, was wounded at Antietam and taken a prisoner at Vicksburg.

Once during his long service he had come home for a brief furlough.

"I am still a common soldier, father. I always do as I am told. There are plenty of others who can have the promotions. I am perfectly content to be one of Captain Lang's 'Red Hot Boys,' as they call us."

"And we are just as proud of you as if you were a colonel," his father answered.

And then came Gettysburg. Nothing was ever heard of Harry Treadwell after that, except the government's report that fell like a shadow upon his parents' life.

The records stated that he had been one of a party of seven seasoned men, who, having passed through so many battles, decided not to face the impending carnage of that day and deserted.

"You couldn't blame Harry," his mother said in her effort to soften the blow to her husband's pride.

"Mary Treadwell! Never speak to me as if you believed it again! Our boy never did such a thing! It's some awful mistake!"

"No, Aaron, I never will," she replied. "I didn't mean that I believed he had done it. But even if he did!"

"But he didn't! He never could. It wasn't in him—not our boy! It's happened before, such mistakes, Mary. They cannot always tell."

"But if he did he might come home again!"—Mary Treadwell's voice broke as she thought of how much obloquy she would endure to see her son again.

"Come home again! He never can, Mary. Harry's life has gone for his country. He is dead, and we must make his good name live!"

As the years rolled on the proud father lived up to his faith in his son's innocence. Bravely he faced the little world at Trescott village. Once only he raised his voice in his son's defense in the old brick store.

"My boy never deserted," he said, with proud conviction. "You folks may think what you please. But never forget that Aaron Treadwell knows that his boy died at Gettysburg; that he is proud of him and always will be and is glad that he raised him to do his share of the fighting on that day."

Thus for nearly forty years Aaron Treadwell walked among his fellow farmers with head erect. To him his son was dead to all but honor.

Whenever the great annual encampment of the Grand Army came to New England he made a point of attending with his wife. The faith he had kept alive for a generation brought him in to some prominence with the veterans of his native state.

Some effort was made to clear the record, but it was impossible to find evidence that would overthrow the government's position. It was clearly established there had been a party of seven who had escaped from the lines that night.

"There's no use trying to do anything, boys," old Aaron Treadwell said. "I don't care for myself what the government says. It doesn't make any difference with what I think. I would be glad if it could be done, but even in Harry's father's mind he is an innocent man. I knew my son, and I know he never deserted the ranks."

There was something grandly appealing in the firm confidence of the white-haired man, and it was not without its influence on others. He was an old man now, and his unbroken belief was wonderful in the eyes of those who heard of it.

His townspeople came almost to share it, and oftentimes they endeavored to dissuade him from taking a long journey to some encampment. This was especially true when the great gathering was held in Boston in 1904. Aaron Treadwell was over eighty years old, and they feared the exertion would be too much for him. But he shook his head and persisted.

"I know we are old, Mary and I, but we must stand up for our boy as long as there is the breath of life in us. He was a good boy; a brave soldier. He fought seventeen battles, and he's never had any one else to stand up for him."

And so the aged father and mother spent that week in Boston, feeling that all the wonderful display of patriotism and honor was as much for their son as for the others.

They were tenderly cared for by those who knew them. Captain Lang, who went with the other Trescott veterans, came around one morning to Aaron Treadwell's room.

"There isn't much going on this morning. Come with me to the Cadets' armory, where the Loyal Legion has its headquarters. They have the most interesting collection of relics of the civil war I have ever seen."

Aaron Treadwell and his wife were delighted. Everything connected with the civil war had come to possess a vital interest to them.

Suddenly the old man fell to the floor in a faint. They picked him up tenderly and carried him into one of the rooms of the Loyal Legion. Mary Treadwell bathed his head, trying to keep back the tears, and with restoratives he was soon revived.

As soon as he opened his eyes he raised himself and stood erect, a strange light gleaming in his eyes, his hands trembling with an eager excitement. Taking his wife's arm tenderly, he said, "I want to be alone with my wife in there just a minute, if I may."

There were only a few in the room, and the curator gently asked them to come away for a short time.

As soon as the door closed Aaron Treadwell drew his wife across the room and pointed to one of the cases.

"There it is, Mary. Look! Harry's watch!"

She brought her old eyes close to the glass before the case.

"It looks like it, Aaron, but—"

"It is, Mary! It is! I always had the number. If they would let us look inside of it. But wait a moment!"

He drew his wife into his arms, and for a few minutes their tears fell together.

"I knew it would come some day, Mary!"

In the meantime Captain Lang had been telling of the old man's faith in his son.

He had just entered when the form of Aaron Treadwell, erect, with a face beaming with happiness, came into the room. He went up to the captain.

The old soldier seemed to expostulate gently, but Aaron Treadwell insisted. He drew forth an old wallet, and, shuffling among some of his boy's letters, brought forth the bill for the watch.

"There's the number, captain. I always knew it; now I want the rest to know it."

Captain Lang went to the curator, and they quietly unlocked the case.

"We'll let him think so any way," he said. "He's had it in his mind so many years that it's affected his head, I think."

The watch was pierced through with a bullet. The label read, "Picked up from the field at Gettysburg August, 1866."

They opened the corroded case after working some time with their knives. But the number of the watch was the same as the one on the bill. The evidence of the innocence of Harry Treadwell was convincing to all.

Not many weeks after Aaron Treadwell died, happy that he had lived to know that his faith in his son was established. His wife soon followed him. It was a source of regret to their friends in Trescott that they had not lived long enough to read the letter received by the postmaster of the town shortly after the pathetic incident had been published in the paper. It was from one of the seven deserters and was in part as follows:

I saw the account of the finding of Harry Treadwell's watch in a newspaper. I've never been happy since we all went in the teeth of his earnest pleading. I am writing, as I have lived since that day, under a different name from that I bore on the day we left the field at Gettysburg. You will never know who I am or where I live. But when I read the account of the father's joy I thought he ought to know that Harry Treadwell was one of the seven; that he followed us from camp, pleading and begging that we should come back and not stain the good record of our years in the army with dishonor.

When the congressman of the district of which Trescott is a part told this tale to a congressional committee he moved the earnest legislators to tears. The record was immediately changed, with the expressed regret of the government at the years of obloquy that had been unjustly hanging over the name of Harry Treadwell, closing with the words:

"Buried among the unknown and honored dead—after Gettysburg."

A Carlyle Comment.

A gentleman once happened to visit Carlyle just after a brilliant man of genius had left him. As they met at the door the man of genius said: "I have just been visiting poor Carlyle. He is a mere wreck, a mere wreck." As the second visitor greeted Carlyle he remarked, "So you've just had Mr. — with you?" "Yes," was the answer of the "mere wreck," "and he thinks God Almighty never made such another!"

A Fish Story.

"Trout protection! Nonsense!" said a gunner of local enunciation. "Trout are amply able to protect themselves. Look at their depredations among ducks, for example, and you will agree with me that it's the birds that need protection. It's a common thing for a trout to jump from the water, seize a duck by the neck, drag the unfortunate fowl into the depths sufficiently to leave its feet sticking in the air, where it can get no purchase upon the universe, and thus drown it. Then the trout picks the feathers from the bird, eats it at its leisure and swims away out of the jurisdiction of the courts. Are there any fishermen? None? Too bad. This would be a match for one of their fish stories."—Philadelphia Record.

"DO IT TO-DAY!"

"And to think that ten months ago I looked like this! I owe it to German Syrup."

The time-worn injunction, "Never put off 'til to-morrow what you can do to-day," is now generally presented in this form: "Do it to-day!" That is the terse advice we want to give you about that hacking cough or demoralizing cold with which you have been struggling for several days, perhaps weeks. Take some reliable remedy for it to-day—and let that remedy be Dr. Roschke's German Syrup, which has been in use for over thirty-five years. A few doses of it will undoubtedly relieve your cough or cold, and its continued use for a few days will cure you completely. No matter how deep-seated your cough, even if dread consumption has attacked your lungs, German Syrup will surely effect a cure—as it has done before in thousands of apparently hopeless cases of lung trouble. Contest Between States.

The supremacy of the Kentucky girl has been challenged. Secretary E. E. Hughes of the Kentucky State Fair has received a letter from Commissioner J. C. Cooper, of Oregon, in which he tries to make arrangements for a drill and vocal contest between forty of the best looking young women of Oregon and an equal number of pretty girls of Kentucky, at the Kentucky State Fair in Louisville, September 16-21. The Oregon girls are coming East on what they have already termed a "Triumphal Tour." Their ultimate destination is the Jamestown Exposition. Enroute to and from Norfolk, they want to stop at Louisville and give an exhibition of their gracefulness as a drill corps, and a display of their vocal ability.

Commissioner Cooper suggests that President Roosevelt be asked to name a commission of three to pass upon the merits of the Kentucky girls and the Oregon girls.

Any community in Kentucky which has some young ladies who desire to enter into this contest will confer a favor upon Secretary Hughes by corresponding with him at once.

My present business is a demonstration of the fact that the people have appreciated my efforts.

I don't claim to make better drinks and better frozen goods than other merchants—I leave that for you to say—but what I do say is this: you can at all times get a Soda, Sundae, Phosphate or any soda fountain drink at my store that is just exactly as it should be. From Minimum to Maximum.

By WILLIAM F. BRYAN.

Copyright, 1897, by M. M. Cunningham.

Out of the night came the sound of galloping hoofs and the staccato bark of small arms. Little Bradley, who had arrived at the Shaw ranch that evening on his first visit west, promptly dropped under the billiard table.
The others, to whom it was an old story, glanced out of the window and went on with their game.

"Looks like a part of the B 4 outfit," remarked Callendar carelessly as he chalked his cue. "Come on out, Bradley. They're merely some joyous cow punching souls on their evening out.
Going down to the Palace, I imagine."

Bradley, red both from exertion and chagrin, emerged from beneath the table and picked up his cue. "I thought that people out here had quit those fool tricks," he explained, his teeth still chattering.

"They have, except for special occasions. But when they do turn loose they generally give us a salute in passing."

"The Palace is that drinking place down the road?"

"Just that. You see," explained Calendar, "when Colonel Shaw bought his ranch there was one quarter section he could not get hold of, owned by a stubborn brute of a fellow who would not let go. That was the foundation of the town of Minimum."

"Funny name?" commented Bradley.
"That's why they took it. The original holder has been dead some years now, but the town goes on. You see, it's nearer the mines by ten miles than the railroad town, and between the miners and the cowboys things are kept lively."

"They don't like the colonel because he objects to the rum holes they run, almost at his door, and when things are muzzled up, they generally ride past and give us a salute. It's only once or twice that the shots have come through. As a rule they fire into the air."

Some one called Bradley to make his shot, and the matter was not again taken up until late that evening, when Bradley and his host sat chatting in the smoking room, and the guests good naturedly told the story of his flight.

"I'd give half a million to have that collection of dives moved away," said Colonel Shaw bitterly. "I suppose when the railroad comes it will be still worse."

"The L. C. L. cutoff?" asked Bradley.
"Are they coming through here?"
"Right past the town," assented the colonel. "I think I shall have to give up the idea of living here. I had hoped to buy up all the land and have the finest place around here in my old age."

"How much are you really willing to spend?" demanded Bradley. "I mean business."

"And I meant the half million. I offered old Pete $300,000 for the quarter before the town grew up, when he just had a little saloon down in one corner."

Bradley gravely put out a hand so white and slender that men seldom anticipated the strength of his grip. "I'll do it and make a profit in the end," he announced.

Colonel Shaw shook hands gravely enough, but he smiled beneath his heavy mustache. A six footer himself, he had all the big man's contempt for the little fellow. How could Bradley, with his five feet seven, conquer where his six feet two had failed?

But he rather liked Bradley in spite of his handicap of size. Of course, he was impossible as a suitor for Nancy's hand, though personally he was a good sort of chap.

The following morning Bradley strolled down to the Palace for a drink, and in ten minutes he had picked up an acquaintance with the proprietor.
That evening at the dinner table his announcement that he found Pete Buckley rather a companionable sort of chap created an even greater sensation than had his performance of the night before.

"He didn't throw you out?" cried
Colonel Shaw in amazement.

"Not a bit of it," said Bradley comfortably, blissfully ignorant of the fact that the colonel himself had been subjected to that indignity, as well as all and sundry of his previous guests who had strayed into the Palace. "We had a couple of bottles of champagne and quite a long chat."

All of the guests were regarding Bradley curiously, but that did not affect Bradley. He was chatting with Nancy, and he did not even hear the colonel's muttered explanation:

"He was so little they were ashamed to hurt him."

Bradley's visit was the first of several during the week, and when he started back to town it was with a bottle of "Buckley's best" (which was very bad indeed) in his traveling bag and a hearty sendoff from the "regulars."

He was back again in a couple of weeks, and the colonel regarded curiously the smile of contentment that played about his lips when Minimum was mentioned. Bradley refused to divulge any of his plans and diverted discussion by the announcement that the L. C. L. had decided to run the line three miles farther to the south.

The statement was received with incredulity until Bradley pointed out the advantages to be gained, and the colonel sighed contentedly. Not only would the line leave his property untouched, but Minimum would not be a railroad town.

Down at Minimum the news was re-

$8.50 PUNCTURE-PROOF TIRES ONLY
Regular Price $8.50 per pair.
To Introduce
We Will Sell
You a Sample Pair for Only
(CASH WITH ORDER $4.50)

NO MORE TROUBLE FROM PUNCTURES.
Result of 15 years experience in tire making. No danger from THORNS, CAC-TUS, PINS, NAILS, TACKS or GLASS.

Serious punctures, like intentional knife cuts, can be vulcanized like any other tire.
Two Hundred Thousand pairs now in actual use. Over Seventy-five Thousand pairs sold last year.

DESCRIPTION: Made in all sizes. It is lively and easy riding, very durable and lined inside with a special quality of rubber, which never becomes porous and which closes up small punctures without allowing the air to escape. We have hundreds of letters from satisfied customers stating that their tires have only been pumped up once or twice in a whole season. They weigh no more than an ordinary tire, the puncture resisting qualities being given by several layers of thin, specially prepared fabric on the tread. That "Holding Back" sensation commonly felt when riding on asphalt or soft roads is overcome by the patent "Basket Weave" tread which prevents all air from being squeezed out between the tire and the road thus overcoming all suction. The regular price of these tires is $8.50 per pair, but for advertising purposes we are making a special factory price to the rider of only $4.50 per pair. All orders shipped same day letter is received. We ship C.O.D. on approval.
You do not pay a cent until you have examined and found them strictly as represented.

We will allow a cash discount of 5 per cent (thereby making the price $4.25 per pair) if you send FULL CASH WITH ORDER and enclose this advertisement. We will also send one nickel plated brass hand pump and two Sampson metal puncture closers on full paid orders (these metal puncture closers to be used in case of intentional knife cuts or heavy gashes). Tires to be returned at OUR expense if for any reason they are not satisfactory on examination.

We are perfectly reliable and money sent to us is as safe as in a bank. Ask your Postmaster, Banker, Express or Freight Agent or the Editor of this paper about us. If you order a pair of these tires, you will find that they will ride easier, run faster, wear better, last longer and look finer than any tire you have ever used or seen at any price. We know that you will be so well pleased order at once, hence this remarkable tire offer.

COASTER-BRAKES, built-up wheels, saddles, pedals, parts and repairs, and prices charged by dealers and repair men. Write for our big SUNNY catalogue.
DO NOT WAIT to buy a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone until you know the new and wonderful offers we are making. It only costs a postal to learn everything. Write it NOW.

SPRING BEAUTIES.

By Margaret Richards.

Copyright, 1907, by P. C. Eastment.

"Uncle John!"
No answer.
"Uncle John!"
"Um-hm." He did not put down his paper, but you knew he was listening.
"Do you s'pose any 'spring beauties' have blossomed yet, Uncle John?"
Slowly he lifted his eyes and turned his head to the window. A ray of warm spring sunshine slanted across the bare branches of the old elm; already the lawn was tinted here and there with green. You waited expectantly, your hand on Guy's great black head.

"Too early," and Uncle John disappeared again behind the folds of his paper. At no time was Uncle John's conversation likely to be adorned with any unnecessary words.

You sighed and stood looking out of the window, a wistful, disappointed little girl; looking while the huge Newfoundland dog beside you pushed his cold nose against your hand and licked your fingers with his great, rough tongue; looking while the budding maple bough beckoned and the million tiny little voices of spring called to you and a lovely little path bordered with sweet flower faces unfolded itself invitingly before your mind's eye.

You could stand it no longer. With a happy little cry you ran out of doors and raced with Guy along the path. Breathless and rosy you halted to unlatch the gate. Out of the corner of your eye you saw the front door open, but you pretended not to notice, not even when Uncle John's warning voice floated to you down the pathway: "You'll get your feet wet!"

On you went, the spring echoes in your ears, the spring sunshine in your eyes, to find your way suddenly blocked by a figure in front. Wonderingly you took your eyes from the glory of a newly leaved maple to see why the figure so obstinately stood in one place.

"HELLO, LITTLE DAME!"

A familiar face laughed down at you. "Oh, Cousin Grace!" you cried delightedly.

Cousin Grace did not stay with Uncle John and Aunt Martha as you did. She lived with her father and mother in a house quite at the other end of the town. Nor was she a little girl like you, but a beautiful young lady, with bright sunshiny hair and wonderful blue eyes, and when she smiled—the sleeping beauty, you thought, and Cinderella and the beautiful princess in the tower must all have looked like Cousin Grace.

"Where are you going?" she asked, and you joyfully explained. If she would come with you she, too, might pick "spring beauties," you suggested. And, although she laughingly shook her head over the flowers, she, too, must have heard the spring voices, for she turned and followed you along a path that wandered away from the road through clumps of young maples and silver birches.

"This is fine!" you cried, racing Guy to an alder bush, then scampering back again. A memory of past frolics enveloped you. "If only Mr. Ned were here," you mused regretfully.

Cousin Grace said nothing, but the pretty smile faded suddenly from her lips. You regarded her in astonishment. Could it be possible that she did not want him too? Why, she and you and Mr. Ned had always had the greatest fun. Silently reproachful, you raised your eyes to her face, and two tears rolled slowly down your cheeks.

"I wish you wouldn't look at me like that," she said almost sharply.

"But it is your fault, Aunt Martha said so. She said she guessed you were sorry enough, now Mr. Ned has gone to New York, that you flirted so—so (you drew a long breath)—so outrageously," you finished, with conscious pride.

"Nonsense!" said Cousin Grace, and you saw that her eyes were very bright and her cheeks seemed uncommonly pink. "Nonsense, Aunt Martha should remember!"

She never finished, for with a short bark Guy made for the little stream, his tail waving frantically as he disappeared behind the rows of alders skirting the bank. One look, and with a glad cry you followed him, skipping from stone to stone in short skirted freedom.

On a rock in the middle of the stream, tall, broad shouldered, his clothing wet, his heavy boots streaked with mud, stood Mr. Ned, his pipe in his mouth, peacefully fishing.

"Hello, little dame! How do, Guy, old boy!" he called gayly, and then he dropped his line and landing net abruptly and, cap in hand, leaped quickly across the stepping stones and held out his hand to Cousin Grace. He had run up from New York for a couple of days' trout fishing, he said, and was so glad to see his old friends, and then they sat on the rocks and talked of such tiresome things as game laws and trout fishing and the greenness of the willows, while you broke off alder twigs and threw them in the stream for Guy to catch.

Suddenly Cousin Grace looked straight up into Mr. Ned's eyes.

"I hear you are very happy in New York."

"Yes," said Mr. Ned.

"Cherchez la femme?" she questioned.

"I see you have found me out," said Mr. Ned.

"Then there is somebody?"

"Yes."

"And you really are to be married?"

"In the fall," replied Mr. Ned promptly.

"Ned"—Cousin Grace put out her hand wistfully, her lips trembling—"I hope you will be happy."

"Thank you, I expect to be," said Mr. Ned.

"We shall have a cottage in a pretty suburban town; nothing very elaborate, just a comfortable, homey little place with porches and a little ground. And we shall not be extravagant in the furnishing—just our books and pictures, a couple of good rugs and a few pieces of old mahogany," he ended, smiling dreamily upstream.

"It is late"—Cousin Grace spoke coldly—"and if we are to find 'spring beauties' we must go on." She rose as she spoke and gave him her hand.

So you went on, although the brightness of the spring day had departed—went on and left Mr. Ned throwing out his line and whistling cheerfully.

And then you came to the little path that had unfolded itself before your mind's eye, a path that pushed through the alders and willows and stretched over tiny threads of water that wandered away from the little stream.

It was there that you found them, clusters of "spring beauties," raising their delicate flower faces from the muddy ground. You dropped on your knees beside them. You laid your face softly against them, going from cluster to cluster in an ecstasy of delight. Not until you had plucked a handful of the frail stalks did you remember Cousin Grace.

"I've found them! I've found them!" you shouted. Still kneeling, you turned and looked back along the path, then you rose slowly to your feet.

In the middle of the path stood Cousin Grace and Mr. Ned. She had been crying, for her eyes were still wet, but she looked beautiful now and was smiling as Mr. Ned held her hands and looked down at her.

"You would not listen to me. I had to resort to desperate measures," he said, "and anyhow I wasn't so far out of the way, for I am going to be married in the fall, am I not, sweetheart? You know there has never been—can never be—any one but you," he added as his arms closed about her.

Your eyes grew big with wonder and delight. You did not understand how it had happened. You did not care. It was like a lovely fairy tale. Cousin Grace was the beautiful princess, and the prince had but claimed his own. Wide eyed and happy, you confronted them, while the pale "spring beauties" slipped from your fingers and lay upon the ground unheeded, a silvery, fragrant offering at love's shrine.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circular and testimonials. Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by Druggists, 75c. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.
